Go, make, ready.

Readiness isn't the bar you clear before you begin. It's where you arrive. Give me an hour with the way your business actually runs, and I'll hand you back a piece of every week that follows.

FIRST

We sit down

An hour on how your work truly moves — the parts you dread, the writing around the work, the friction you stopped noticing years ago.

THEN

I make it ready

Claude, wired into those exact places, by hand, around your operation. Your voice and judgment kept entirely. The tedium removed.

AFTER

It runs

Nothing to babysit, no subscription of mine, no lock-in. You simply keep the hours it gives back, every week, after I've gone.

WHAT CHANGES

What your Monday looks like after.

WHAT EATS THE WEEK	WHAT IT BECOMES
The press release for every opening, written from nothing	→ Drafted from your show notes, in your own voice
Proposals and spec documents, rebuilt each time	→ Assembled from the brief in minutes, then edited
Collector and client follow-up that quietly slips	→ Everyone answered within a day, personally
The monthly report nobody wants to write	→ Generated from your own data, ready to sign
Trip reports and updates written at midnight	→ Assembled from your field notes before dinner

I ran Unix systems and built the web in the nineties, when being early was a superpower. This is that same morning again, only larger — and I know where to put my hands. No jargon. No hype. No lock-in.

Kyle Parker Cunningham

GO, MAKE, READY

gomakeready.com
kyle@gomakeready.com
Remote, with occasional coffee.

SET IN EB GARAMOND & DM SANS · TWO INKS: PRUSSIAN & PLUM
LETTERPRESS · AGILE METEOR PRESS · TRUTH OR CONSEQUENCES, NEW MEXICO